

It was a lazy afternoon, and Alice took a nap on the riverbank.

The Mad Hatter is speaking, the Dormouse is sleeping, and Alice is drinking her tea.

Dorothy's house landed in Oz, she opened the door, Munchkins greeted her, and Glinda showed her the yellow brick road.

The glove that Alice found belonged to the White Rabbit.

The house that was carried by the twister fell onto the unsuspecting witch.

The scarecrow whose head was filled with straw recited the Pythagorean theorem.

The Cowardly Lion who was afraid of his own tail chased the little dog

Alice shrank to the size of a little mouse after she ate the little cake.

Dorothy learned that there is no place like home.

Whoever hears the Jabberwock will run in fear.

Alice told whomever she met the story of Wonderland.

It was a long time before Dorothy met the Wizard of Oz.

Because the Queen, who was very bossy, commanded it, Alice joined the croquet game.

When he visited the Wizard, the Cowardly Lion received the courage that he wanted.

Dorothy told the story that she had been to Oz where she made new friends who shared her adventures.

The Munchkins marched with Dorothy to the beginning of the yellow brick road, and then Dorothy and Toto continued on their own to Emerald City because they wanted a way home which was far away from Oz.

Dorothy who has returned from Oz where she met a witch who became her enemy because the girl wore the magic shoes that had belonged to the witch's sister, and Alice who has returned from Wonderland where she ate cakes that made her larger or smaller, but these cakes gave her the opportunity for many adventures that she had not expected, meet at the library where they live in different books and they tell anyone who will listen their fantastical stories.
